unseen energy i.e. Chi -

do we need to respond to life to

Chi (also spelled Qi) is the vital life force that animates the human body—an electrochemical and bioenergetic current connecting mind, organs, and environment. When Chi flows freely, we experience vitality, clarity, and emotional balance.

The Chinese word qi literally means “air” or “breath,” yet its deeper sense points to the living spark within matter.

Chi energy (Qi) is the body’s life-sustaining current—a subtle bioelectrical flow that governs movement, metabolism, and conscious awareness

Taoist texts refer to it as the “thread” connecting spirit and substance. The Chinese have long believed Chi is the fundamental energy that sustains all life. Physiologically, Chi parallels the body’s microcurrents—nerve impulses, ionic gradients, and electromagnetic communication among cells.

- We are part of an energetic equation or dance
- Creation continuously experiencing itself
And becoming something new whilst connected to an energy that permeates all existence and is timeless, ever resounding, all encompassing
- How can we get out of our own way to experience this and transform our own energy field to raise our vibration and consciousness?

Hado – Wave, vibration, energy wave

The universe is composed of Hado.

Everything that exists in the universe is built up from Hado

The only difference between each thing is frequency.

This is the modern scientific conclusion.

Most of us believe that substance exists as a real being.

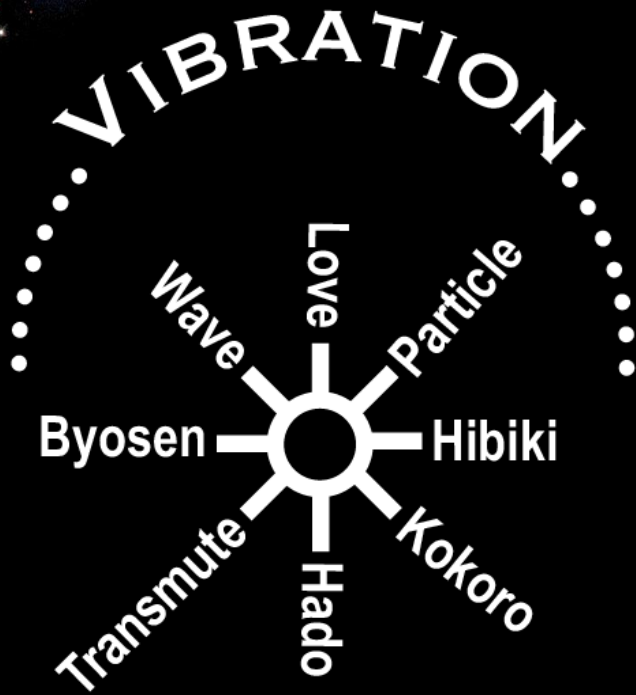

However, substance becomes vague when broken down into a molecular level, and the atomic and elementary particle levels.

When it is broken down further to the quantum level, its existence becomes uncertain. This is the “uncertainty principle” of quantum mechanics. And it concludes that substance is matter (particle) and, at the same time, wave (hado).

And it is also energy. Matter transforms into a great amount of energy by a nuclear reaction, but energy can also transform back into matter.

Our consciousness and thoughts are hado energy as well.

Kokoro

Considering that a human is composed of three elements – body, Kokoro (mind) and spirit, the body is like the hardware and the Kokoro is like the software, and the spirit can be thought of as the main system to operate them.

In Japanese the term “Kokoro” gives broader meanings according to the context for example – mind, heart, feelings, self, whole, spirit, faith, consciousness, will, personality, idea, philosophy, and so on)
